SR TECHNICS RETAINS DUNLOP AIRCRAFT TYRES FOR EUROPEAN AND MIDDLE EASTERN BASES

Dunlop Aircraft Tyres today announced it has retained an exclusive deal worth over €2 million with maintenance company SR Technics - with potential to increase the business.

Under the three-year deal secured following a competitive tender from all four aircraft tyre manufacturers, Birmingham-based Dunlop Aircraft Tyres will supply its products to SR Technics maintenance bases across Europe and the Middle East.

The tyres will be fitted to Boeing and Fokker 100 aircraft. SR Technics' bases which specialise in the maintenance of wheels, tyres and brakes will be the first to benefit from the agreement.

“We are delighted to have retained this business,” said Dunlop Aircraft Tyres’ chairman Ian Edmondson. “While we are the world’s only specialist aircraft tyre company, we work in a highly competitive environment.

“Retaining this contract with SR Technics is very rewarding because it shows that we are delivering highly reliable products which are strongly supported by a customer focused business.”

SR Technics’ executive vice president, integrated supply chain management, Torsten Tamm added: “It is vital that our suppliers can deliver the product quality and service expected of the airlines that we support.

“During our long-standing relationship with Dunlop Aircraft Tyres, we have been pleased with the company’s commitment to meeting the needs of our business and its continued efforts to drive down cost of ownership.”

AAC Capital Partners, formerly the private equity business of ABN Amro, acquired 74.6 per cent ownership of Dunlop Aircraft Tyres in May 2007.

Ends.
